Annual Letter Issued; Spotlights Role of Faith-based and Community Groups

On March 20, USAID Administrator Rajiv Shah released the Agency's third annual letter discussing ending extreme poverty and USAID's "New Model" for development. "We're moving from a traditional model of top-down development to a new model that engages talent and innovation everywhere to achieve extraordinary goals. We're trying to change the way development works, with new partnerships, a greater emphasis on innovation, and a relentless focus on measuring and delivering results," Shah says in the letter. To this end, the letter highlights the role of faith based and civil society organizations in advancing USAID's Call to Action on Child Survival, which included commitments from and 200 civil society organizations and 220 faith-based organizations to leverage their influence towards life-saving behavior changes in their communities. // READ: 2013 USAID Annual Letter

Administrator Shah releases USAID Forward Progress Report

Administrator Rajiv Shah at event co-hosted by AEI and CAP, releasing USAID Forward Progress report.

On March 20, at an event co-hosted by the American Enterprise Institute and the Center for American Progress, Administrator Shah released the USAID Forward Progress Report. It highlights the successes and challenges of the past year in reforming the Agency and delivering better, more sustainable results. Dr. Shah underscored the role played by faith based and community groups in advancing this model, "partnering with engines of American innovation—corporations, foundations, NGOs, and faith-based communities—to help nations build innovation economies and democratic societies connected to our own." As an example he pointed to Ethiopian NGO, Project Mercy, saying, "All you have to do is meet people like [founders] Marta and Deme, and the hundreds and thousands of people whose lives they have helped transform to know that the future of development lies in their hands, not in ours." Shah reported that USAID has awarded $728 million to local institutions in 73 countries in the past year alone.

Drawing on a database powered by Not For Sale, the extension grades products based on the likelihood and extent to which it contributes to or utilizes slave labor. Other winning ideas include: 1) Leveraging Mxit, Africa's largest social network, to launch an anonymous SMS anti-trafficking hotline; 2) Creating a secure online network where counter-trafficking organizations can share standardized data with each other; and 3) Another web-browser plug-in prototype called Shop4Society. Partners on the campus challenge included Abolition International, Not For Sale, Made in a Free World, Free the Slaves and MTV Exit.

Announcement for NGO programs benefiting Malian refugees in Burkina Faso, Mauritania, and Niger-

PRM will prioritize funding for proposed NGO activities that best meet the Bureau's priorities for Malian refugees in Burkina Faso, Mauritania, and Niger. NGOs applying for funding must demonstrate a working relationship with UNHCR and/or current UNHCR funding. A letter of support from UNHCR for the proposed activities is strongly recommended. This letter should highlight the gap in services the proposed program is designed to address. NEW! Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor (DRL)—Protecting Transgender Persons from Violence and Combating Impunity-

DRL seeks to support programs that increase protection of transgender persons who face acute forms of violence and harassment. DRL's overall goal is to ensure that incidents of violence are documented and investigated and that victims receive appropriate legal redress through domestic, regional, or international human rights mechanisms. DRL seeks proposals that will: (1) strengthen civil society organizations' efforts to both document incidents of violence and the investigation process (or lack thereof); (2) ensure transgender persons have adequate legal representation; (3) support local civil society organizations to seek redress through regional and international human rights mechanisms; and (4) where feasible/appropriate, sensitivity training for law enforcement agencies. Competitive proposals will link documentation, training and legal representation efforts as a means of promoting accountability and combating impunity. Proposals are encouraged to include components that focus activity at the local and/or community level, and should include sub-grants to local transgender organizations. Organizations may also want to consider different forms of inclusive sub-granting, such as advisory committees for grant selections. Proposals may consider, but are not limited to, activities such as documentation of incidents of violence and investigation processes, legal assistance for victims, improving capacity of lawyers and civil society organizations to assist transgender persons, sensitivity training for law enforcement agencies, and support for advocates to utilize domestic, regional, and international human rights mechanisms to promote accountability for human rights violations. Other activities which support the goals noted above may also be considered.
